

This is a horrible idea it is another attempt to destroy fair use. All this will be a catalyst to create a black market for items that do not adhere to any rules that you or any other regulatory agency sets forth

There are several examples of this adapt or die it is the very nature of business and of life look at the music industry. Yes it is illegal to download music but people still do it and why because there is no viable alternative to get access to old music any more.

So services came up with ways to provide that service... and it is not because people are into stealing but because they wanted a way to access the past.

And what do you think is going to happen when the FCC says go and buy a $1000 TV and Recording device but broadcasters are going to tell you what shows you can watch and when and you will only be able to record them to watch later if They say it is ok no person in their right mind will ever agree to that ever.

I for one will not purchase under any circumstance such a device
